

TCO Certified

Price list, version 6.3

List of fees for displays

New certificate basic model	Fee (EUR)
TCO Certified, for displays	5,700
TCO Certified Edge, for displays	2,850

All sales names used in the marketing of a display must be registered on the certificate. There must be at least one sales name registered on each certificate. The sales name is the most unique name the brand owner uses to identify the product in marketing (for example on the website). (A product may also have several regulatory model names that identify different hardware configurations but these names are normally not used in marketing.)

Several model names may be placed on the same certificate by using wildcards (*) in the model name as long as they are all marketed under the same sales names, share the same display size, resolution, aspect ratio and chassis appearance.

Fees for a new certificate include five sales names, five type keys and critical components as long as they are included in the same application form.

Changing a certificate

Fee (EUR)

Comments

- ¹⁾ All sales names used in marketing of the product must be registered on the certificate.
- ²⁾ Type keys will not be charged as long as the combinations are fewer than the amount of sales names. No charge applies to type designation keys describing cabinet colour or countries where the product is sold.
- ³⁾ If critical components are changed or added to a certified product (LCD panel, pivot stand, AC adaptor, etc.), the company must apply for an update of the certificate.
- ⁴⁾ The validity period for an upgraded certificate is the same as for the original certificate plus 12 months. Once the certificate is upgraded, the original certificate is cancelled.
- ⁵⁾ If a certificate is not prolonged, it will be cancelled and archived when it expires. To prolong an archived certificate, an opening fee of 1,000 EUR is charged.

New Certificate series models	Fee (EUR)
TCO Certified, for headsets, small difference	1,450
TCO Certified, for headsets, insignificant difference	0

When certifying a series of models, a discount will be given on all models that are part of the series and that are technically similar to the basic model. More similarity gives more discount, according to the below categories.

All models in a series must share these aspects:

- There must be a series name that cover all products
- Same type of communication (wireless/wired)
- Same type of housing design
- Same type of speakers

Small difference are considered as:

- Different number of speakers (one or two)
- Different design of microphone (with or without sound insulation)
- Different types of connectors
- Different types of attachment devices for head and ears

Insignificant difference are considered as

- Different user-changeable accessories
- Different countries power plug of charger
- Different color of housing

Each model must have at least one sales name (i.e. the name of the product used in marketing) that must be included in the application. Fees for a new basic certificate include five sales names if they are included in the same application form. The fee for series models include one sales name.
